History of LSV

Lord Stirling Village is located within walking distance to Lord Stirling Park. Lord Stirling Park is a 925/950 acre park operated by the Somerset County Park Commission. The park displays a diverse ecosystem in contains swamps, fields, forests, brooks, marshes, and meadows.

Lord Stirling Park has two major parts. It is home to the Somerset County Environmental Education Center which contains 425 acres and provides educational services for visitors; it is also the starting point for a number of hiking trails for the exploration of the park. The office and education building was the first public building in the United States that was solar-heated when opened in 1977. The Lord Stirling Stable is an equestrian center with stables, an indoor arena, outdoor rings, and about 10 miles of dedicated horseback trails in its 366-acre section of the Lord Stirling Park.

The area was prehistorically part of the Glacial Lake Passaic. For thousands of years it has been inhabited, and current archeological sites explore the artifacts of the Lenape civilization. The park is named after William Alexander, Lord Stirling, a general of the American revolution whose estate included the area. His manor is in an unopened part of the park.
